the ethos of black motherhood in america only white women get pregnant examines the ethos of black and white mothers in america s racialized society kimberly c harper argues that the current black maternal health crisis is not a new one but an existing one rooted in the disregard for black wombs dating back to america s history with chattel slavery examining the reproductive laws that controlled the reproductive experiences of black women harper provides a fresh insight into the bad black mother trope that black feminist scholars have theorized and argues that the controlling images of black motherhood are a creation of the american nation state in addition to a discussion of black motherhood harper also explores the image of white motherhood as the center of the landscape of motherhood scholars of communication gender studies women s studies history and race studies will find this book particularly useful between the christianity of this land and the christianity of christ i recognize the widest possible difference frederick douglass 1845 the prophets of old were not easy to listen to because they did not flatter they did not cajole they spoke hard words that often chafed and unsettled their listeners like the old testament prophets and more recent prophetic voices like frederick douglass dr eric mason calls the evangelical church to a much needed reckoning in a time when many feel confused complacent or even angry he challenges the church to be aware to understand that the issue of justice is not a black issue it s a kingdom issue to learn how the history of racism in america and in the church has tainted our witness to a watching world be redemptive to grieve and lament what we have lost and to regain our prophetic voice calling the church to remember our gospel imperative to promote justice and mercy be active to move beyond polite safe conversations about reconciliation and begin to set things aright for our soon coming king who will be looking for a woke church in understanding the boundary between disability studies and special education through consilience self study and radical love the authors explore what it means to engage in boundary work at the intersection of traditional special education systems and critical disability studies in education the book consists of fifteen groundbreaking accounts that challenge dominant medicalized discourses about what it means to exist within and around special education systems that create space for new conceptions of what it means to teach lead learn and exist within a conciliatory space driven by radical love and disability justice principles the book pushes readers to consider how their own personal professional and programmatic future transformational actions can be driven by disruption and the desire for freedom from the hegemony of traditional special education and white and ability supremacy in this classic work first published in 1994 kelly brown douglas offers a compelling portrait of who jesus is for the black community beginning with the early testimonies of the enslaved through the writings and thought of religious and literary figures voices from the civil rights and black power era including martin luther king jr and malcolm x up through the contemporary work of black and womanist theologians douglas presents a living tradition that speaks powerfully to the message of our day black lives matter frederick douglass said without a struggle there can be no progress but what if everyday is a struggle kelisa wing has had her fair share of both weeds and seeds good and the bad but she has decided to choose to plant positive seeds throughout her life this is a story sometimes sad sometimes funny about teaching loving and activating your faith to assist you in continuing to push forward in life regardless of what life has brought your way so that you too can plant positive seeds everywhere you go transforming society's failure is the autobiographical story of Omari Amili. Omari was raised in the Pacific Northwest where he attended over 15 schools. Growing up, his parents were addicted to crack cocaine, and their addiction led to countless adverse childhood experiences and chronic instability. Omari began running the streets and hustling in the 4th grade; by the 6th grade, he was kicked out of Seattle public schools after being sent to an alternative high school at the young age of 11. Omari began to hate school, and he never quite bounced back. Ultimately, he became a high school dropout and a product of the school-to-prison pipeline. In young adulthood, Omari found a way to make a large amount of money and headed down a path of destruction that he mistakenly perceived as the road to success, blinded by foreign cars, shiny rims, nice clothes, expensive jewelry, and a pocket full of money. Omari ran the streets with his mind stuck on hitting that next lick. However, as always, when it comes to fast money, it was only a matter of time before the run was over, and he was sent to prison on 30 felony convictions. Upon his release, Omari decided to utilize post-secondary education as a tool to turn his life around, undeterred by prior academic experiences and motivated by the desire to never return to prison and be an active role model for his kids. Omari defied the odds, fought through adversity, and flipped his GED into a master's degree. Read about Omari's journey in Transforming Society's Failure.

The evidence is clear that teaching children, especially our most vulnerable children, skills that increase social and emotional competence, resilience, emotional intelligence, happiness, cognitive abilities, and psychological flexibility significantly improves the outcomes of their lives, resulting in higher high school graduation rates, prevention of mental health problems, higher college admission rates, stronger families, higher college graduation rates, less likely to be involved in crime and violence, less likely to have drug and alcohol problems, better long-term physical health outcomes, more physical activity, less obesity, better long-term mental health outcomes including less depression and fewer suicide attempts. Resilience provides the life line that can lead poor children out of poverty, end the cycle of violence in families, and end the school-to-prison pipeline that is prevalent in low-income neighborhoods. That we know it works and aren't providing it to every child is child neglect on a global scale. Resilience protects children and adults against poor outcomes when negative events happen; we never know who will experience a sudden loss, an act of violence, or another form of trauma, but we can provide resilience training that empowers them with knowledge and skills that empower them to weather any storm. Many streets in the united states have the same impact on the physical and mental health of our children as war torn streets in other countries violence is violence whether it is the result of a declared war or hopelessness and poverty the power to change the outcome for children in any war zone here or abroad begins with resilience compelling evidence from studies that followed children for a decade show we must do this resilience should be taught in every school but that s not happening that s the bad news the good news is that any individual family teacher or community can follow the steps provided in this book and build resilience in themselves and their families or students we don t have to wait for anyone to help us we can help ourselves by learning these critical life skills the knowledge and skills necessary to make a significant difference in your child s life are easy to implement because they were designed with an understanding of what helps humans thrive what world do we want our children and grandchildren to live in today 1 out of every 32 americans is incarcerated or on parole we can do better we should do better now that we know what stops the cycle of violence and school to prison pipeline we have a moral obligation to use the knowledge to help children fulfill their potential jeanine joy s work focuses on preventing problems before they occur she is a ph d candidate who has spent over two decades focused on solving one big question what makes humans thrive after she d proved to herself that the answers she d found worked by using the concepts in her own life and then with friends and small groups she founded happiness 1st institute in 2011 the name comes from the fact that when you get happy first everything else is easier her programs are available at happiness1st com a thrive more now company
